Prediction of the capability of electric motors for static and dynamic loads by characterizing the frequency response of a frequency-controlled inverter. The speed of the induction motor has always been limited by the maximum frequency of the inverter when using a fixed frequency-based drive scheme. Various strategies have been proposed to overcome the limitation by either increasing the number of frequency levels of the drive, increasing the number of active phases or switching to a constant torque-based or constant frequency drive, all of which lead to increase in cost and size of the drive.
